LEGAL 450: Legal Research and Writing

Course Description:
This course is designed to help students improve their ability to analyze and write about complicated legal issues. You should expect to do a lot of writing in this course. You will learn how to read and understand court opinions and how to find your way around a law library. Writing assignments include your own resume and a job application letter, case briefs, memoranda, OP-ED essays, and a research paper. These assignments are written from the perspective of a lay person writing to another lay person. Satisfactory completion of this course fulfills your junior year writing requirement for the Legal Studies Department. Non-majored students that have taken LEGAL 250 or equivalent and a College Writing (CW) course, please contact instructor for registration consideration at: jnwolf@polsci.umass.edu

Online CS1 - CPE Summer Session 1 (5/16-6/24)
Gen. Ed./ Credits: 3 credits

Instructor: Jeremy Wolf
My work straddles the sub-fields of American politics and political theory, with a specific focus on the history and political significance of "the economy" in American politics. I also have a substantial side interests in the politics of methodology, American political thought, democratic theory, and political economy. My dissertation examines the production of the economy as a materialization, as well as the ways in which this produced object is read back onto theorists whose work predates its production. I am particularly interesting in the ways in which recognition of the economy as a produced object of relatively recent vintage may open up new possibilities for political change.
