Presidential Campaign Communications Project: Data for Scholarly Research

Over several years, I have developed two comprehensive datasets of presidential campaign communications - the Presidential Stump Speeches Dataset, which includes the full texts of all general election presidential stump speeches by Democratic and Republican presidential candidates between 1952 and 2016; and the Presidential Debate Answers Dataset, which includes the full texts of all debate answers by Democratic and Republican presidential candidates in 1960 and between 1976 and 2016. Texts are arranged by candidate/campaign, but it is also possible to sub-divide it into smaller units of analysis (e.g. by speech/debate).

These datasets combine information from the Presidential Election Discourse Dataset compiled by the Annenberg Center and the University of Pennsylvania; the Stanford Political Communication Lab; the American Presidency Project; and other publicly available sources.

These datasets can be used as the basis for understanding trends in presidential stump speech/debate rhetoric over time, as well as for making many types of quantitative and qualitative comparisons across candidates and campaigns. I make these data available on request for scholarly research.
